ANTHONY WAYNE: FACT AND FICTION?"

Carrie Sowden, Archaeological Director of the National Museum of the Great Lakes, will present "Anthony Wayne: Fact and Fiction". This presentation covers the recent discovery of the side-wheel steamer that sank in 1850. We cover what is known, what is believed, and what we are finding from the archaeology.

Carrie Sowden, is a graduate of Emory University, as well as the Nautical Archaeology Program at Texas A&M University where she earned her Master of Arts in Anthropology. Carrie's areas of specialty are historical archaeology and waterlogged artifact conservation. During her career as a nautical archaeologist, she has worked on shipwreck projects in Maine, Florida, Alabama, Virginia, Portugal, the Azores, Turkey, and Ohio.

In the last several years, the Great Lakes have experienced destructive and toxic algae blooms. Phosphorus from farm runoff combined with favorable weather and lake conditions are producing large and dangerous blooms. Researchers note that if land management practices and climate change trends continue, the lake is likely to see more blooms, putting fish, livestock, and humans at risk.

Join us for a conversation with Jeffrey M. Reutter, Ph.D., retired Director of the Ohio Sea Grant College Program and Stone Laboratory at The Ohio State University. He will discuss how Lake Erie works, its history of both degradation and rehabilitation, the current harmful algal blooms and dead zone, and what needs to happen to fix them.
